Doetry. For the Mercury NOT NEEDED. BY RILLEN.

u dost not need it, Lord! Not the poor work My hands can offer Thee ; chariot will roll on, although its wheels Were never touched by me. seed of truth will whiten all earth's fields, bough I my toil refrain ; harvests will be gathered, though I ne'er hould help to load the wain. u dest not need me, Lord, upon thy earth; At one low word of thine other could be raised to fill my place With better work than mine v sunshine would not miss me, nor Thy flowers would not be ved much the less, and those who felt my los Would find more love in Thee.

ou dost not need me, Lord, in thy far heaven Thy angels would not know difference, if my voice should join With hymning faint and low. heaven is too full of love to feel My heart pulse in its air, adoration faileth at thy throne That I could offer there.

ou dost not reed me, Lord, in earth, or hea Archangels wait thy will, y winds and lightnings spur across the sky, I'ly errands to fulfill. e stars amid their courses stoop to fight When needed by thy cause, lowest rocks of earth grow eloquent favor of thy laws.

u dost not need me, Lord, 'tis I who need ome work of thine to do. ne work to rouse my dreamy energies, To life as high, as true. ou can'st not need me ; yet permit thy child To aid thy great design, d in the songs and worship of thy saints Let some small part be mine.

St. Helena Island. CONTENTMENT.

BY MAUDE INVING. The gems amid thy hair, fair maid, Are beautiful and bright :

The coally rate that decks thy form Upon this feative night, Was woven in an eastern loom ; And yet I would not give This true, contented heart of mine Amid such wealth to live.

The carpets that thy feet do press Are from far India's looms; Thou dwelle t 'mid rich splendor ; Silk shaded are thy rooms;

My home, so poor and plain, to dwell within thy palace halls, -The change I would disdain. For 'mid such baxury thy heart Is sad, and longs to be Free from the galling chains of life, And all thy misery.

And I am very happy now, I love my humble home, And never wish from this dear spot I love so well, to roam.
